

Go Periscope
“Crush Me”

Director: Shayla Jones
Phantom Light Media
Contact: (206) 877-2669
8 February 2010

We open to Florin and Josh standing in front of the album cover, in a white glow, As they sing the first verse, they fade in and out, and then evaporate, as the lights from the album stream forward. As the lights travel across the screen, vector graphics from Go Periscope, rain from the stream of light.

A woman listening to headphones is getting ready to go out to the club. As she touches certain objects, like a glass, the glass starts to glow and magically floats off the table. After using her lipstick, and quickly applying it and fussing with her hair in the mirror, the lipstick begins to glow and floats off the dresser. She grabs her keys next to the glass that's still floating up in the air, and steps out the door, wearing a little hot number. As the glass travels around in a circle, we can see a distorted reflection of her through the glass of her backside.

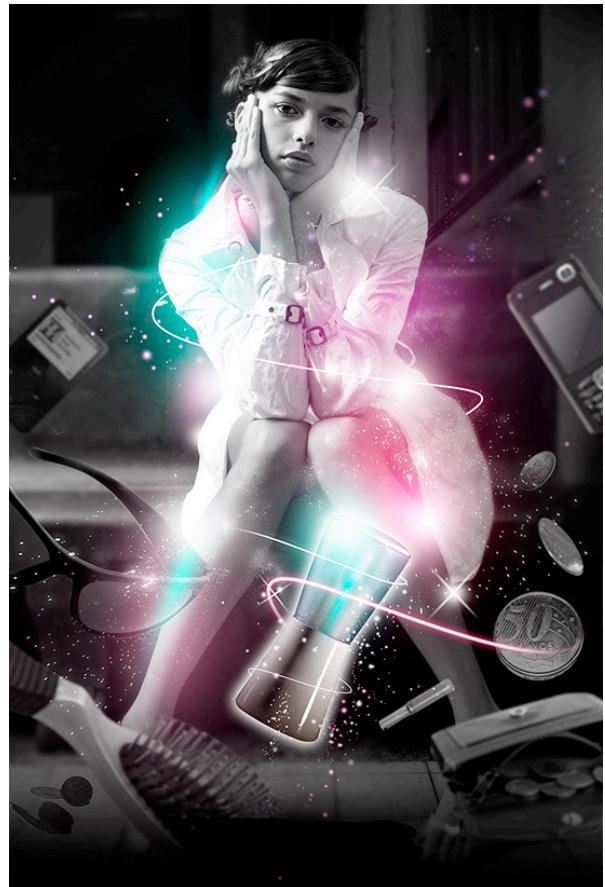

Were inside a house party, Florin, and Josh are performing in a fluorescent glow,. Fog fills the house, and people are dancing in retro looking clothing, but some pieces look oddly futuristic. Like their trying to fit in, but something seems a little off. Neon clothing items are intermixed with their wardrobe, and people ae drinking blue juice with neon swirly straws.

A couple are seen making out on the couch, and as the woman touches the man's face, her fingers leave orange, florescent finger tip marks on his cheek as she brushes the side of his face.

Two people are passing floating objects to each other, a type of futuristic looking game. We cut to another room with people dancing in a fog-covered room, and a guy is sitting back with shades, with beautiful women dancing around him.

During the last verse, the woman from the opening appears in a symphony of lights, that seem to melt with her dress, she holds up her hand and a crystal heart shines bright. A cascade of vector graphics erupt from the heart. Everyone stares at her, and people in the room remove their sunglasses, as a white light seems to envelop the room.

We end the video, with Florin and Josh in an empty house, the party and everybody in the room has disappeared. All that's left is a crystal heart diamond that the woman was holding in her hand. Josh or Florin, picks it up, and pockets it in his coat.